After the imposition of the penal laws in the late 18th century, the incidence of nonconformism increased dramatically, and many people began to attend nonconformist churches, particularly in the towns and cities. In the absence of records from the Catholic Church, many nonconformists were recorded in the registers of other denominations, such as the Anglican Church or the Wesleyan Methodists. These registers provide valuable information about the lives of nonconformists, including details of marriages, baptisms, and burials. The information can be used to trace family histories and learn more about the lives of ancestors who may not have been recorded in other records. To make use of these registers, it is important to have a good understanding of the history of nonconformism in the area you are researching, as well as the different denominations that existed during the period you are interested in. This will help you to identify the registers that may be of interest, and to understand the context in which they were created. In addition, it is important to be aware of the limitations of these registers, as they may not always be complete or accurate. Despite these challenges, nonconformist registers provide an important source of information for genealogists and family historians, and are an essential part of the genealogical record in many areas of the world.
