American Paintings and Related Pictures In The Henry Francis Du Pont Winterthur Museum

Henry Francis du Pont Winterthur Museum Edgar Preston Richardson

American paintings and related pictures in the Henry Francis du Pont Winterthur Museum reflect both early America and the du Pont family's interests in American art and antiques. The museum's collection includes early American paintings, prints, and related pictures, covering a wide range of subjects and styles. Established by Henry Francis du Pont, the museum opened in 1968 and has since become a leading institution for the study and promotion of American decorative arts. The museum's permanent collection includes important works by American artists, as well as objects related to American history and culture.

The museum's exhibits and programs offer visitors a rich and immersive experience, showcasing the beauty and complexity of American decorative arts through changing exhibitions, educational programs, and special events. The Winterthur Museum, Garden and Library is located in Delaware, near the historic home of Henry Francis du Pont, and is open to the public. Visitors can explore the museum's galleries, garden, and library, as well as participate in workshops and tours, and engage with the museum through its online resources and social media platforms.

Henry Francis du Pont Winterthur Museum

The Henry Francis du Pont Winterthur Museum is a premier institution for the study and promotion of American decorative arts, with exhibits and programs that showcase the beauty and complexity of American decorative arts through changing exhibitions, educational programs, and special events. The museum is located in Delaware, near the historic home of Henry Francis du Pont, and is open to the public. Visitors can explore the museum's galleries, garden, and library, as well as participate in workshops and tours, and engage with the museum through its online resources and social media platforms.
needlework picture detail, Mary King, Philadelphia, 1754.