As the pervasiveness of information technology increases, so does the need for an independent, objective method for evaluating conformance testing. This is a means of measuring whether a product testing and certification is a way to ensure that standard-based systems comply. Conformance testing is a means of measuring whether a product meets the specified criteria. It provides an independent, objective method for evaluating conformance.